Launch of a new network for agroecology in the Mediterranean: MEDAE

What is MEDAE?

A network of diverse and complementary organisations (universities, research centres, development organisations, farmers organisations, consumers organisations, political organisations, etc.) that believes that the principles of agroecology can provide a relevant and multidimensional response to sustainable food systems in the Mediterranean.

The strength of the network

- Collaboration and exchange of information and knowledge
- Political and scientific advocacy
- Representation and visibility of agroecology stakeholders in the Mediterranean

- Funding research

Join the network and take part in its activities!

What are the prospects for supporting the deployment of agroecology in public policy in North Africa?

26 novembre 2024 (14:00 -16:00 CET)

registration mandatory

This webinar will present the results of a cross-sectional analysis of public policies in North Africa, as well as an examination of the place of agroecology in international conventions, and will look at the extent to which these policies provide a favourable or unfavourable framework for the agroecological transition. There will be time for discussion on the prospects for supporting agroecology and ways of encouraging the agroecological transition in North Africa.
